

Labour's manifesto should include repeal of all anti-union laws and a strong right to strike

This statement, launched by the Free Our Unions campaign, has already been signed by hundreds of Labour members and trade unionists, including Matt Wrack, Ian Hodson, John McDonnell and Claudia Webbe. Please add your name. (If you tick to stay in touch you consent to receive regular communication from Free Our Unions, mainly by fortnightly email updates. Your data will be held securely.)

“The reality is that strikes are largely illegal in Britain, as result of numerous laws introduced over almost four decades. In line with the votes at Labour conference in 2015, 2017 and 2018, all these anti-union laws, from Thatcher’s 1980 Employment Act to Cameron’s 2016 Trade Union Act, must be scrapped, and replaced with positive rights for workers and unions, including a strong right to strike. We call on the party to include this policy in its manifesto.”

Name	Union branch, CLP, positions	Phone	Email	Stay in touch?
-------------	-------------------------------------	--------------	--------------	---------------------------

By staying in touch you consent to being contacted about campaigning and events against the coup by the Free Our Unions campaign. Your data will be held securely and not shared with third parties.